The #Setup has been around for many years following the increase of technology becoming available. For years on platforms like TikTok and Instagram I have seen posts regarding people's personal gaming setups. Most of the time these posts are to show off the aesthetics of the setup. This community can become very niche and refracted as it gets quite expensive to not only obtain a setup but to also make it aesthetically appealing. I've once even found myself to fall into this community as I was buying my first PC for gaming and wanted to have a cool setup like these other guys. However I realized that to do so I would have to spend quite a bit of money I didn't have and so I slowly stepped away from that community. However when I was a part of it I noticed that it's actually quite a close knit community while also being a judgmental one. The entire community is based on people rating each other's setups, or giving advice, however no one ever gets upset when they get a bad rating or advice as it's just a common occurrence in the community at this point. This community will continue to evolve in upcoming years as new more advanced technology releases.
